

LuLe recounts IPPA

*Dynamic guesses about past, present and future.
And if it was so?*

When existential doubts remain without an intrinsic response, when continuous research gives some answers, but at the same time pose more questions, then everything becomes a never-ending cycle. At this point you can only continue, with the hope that one day something illuminating will happen while reading the next page.

Note from the author . . . . . pag.3

LuLe recounts IPPA . . . . . pag.4

Book key . . . . . pag.62

Do not read this text unless you have two hours of time in solitude and you can free yourself from your preconceptions.

Thank you

I have read and heard from men of science, theologians, philosophers and from conversations I had with lazy partners.

Many were the questions hanging without answers and as much the answers given without awareness.

From this, I thought: is there a chance to pore over happenings remaining neutral in the true sense of the word?

A blast of energy reached me like a dart. I was not aware of its existence, it just showed up, its name was L<sub>u</sub>L<sub>e</sub>.

That's how our conversation began.

L<sub>u</sub>L<sub>e</sub> is a particle of energy with whom we will make this imaginary journey through past, present and future. L<sub>u</sub>L<sub>e</sub> will make us perceive how slowly the feeling of time has grown in our conscience.

L<sub>u</sub>L<sub>e</sub> had heard this story from other particles scattered in the not empty vacuum, a remnant of previous experiences of pre-existing universes. Yes, because the world and the universe we belong to are not the only ones there.

Some authoritative physics say that prior to our universe, born from a Singularity, there was nothing but a black hole that attracted and compacted everything.

This theory concludes with the assertion that this means there was nothing transcendental.

Well, then what?

Will we stop here, or will we go ahead and explore other possibilities?

In quantum physics, the behavior of particles ejected toward a barrier through two fissures has been tested. It was found out that, when the particles are observed, by special detectors positioned on the openings, they pass as bullets through one or the other slit, according to their trajectory, then impact on the background barrier. When the experiment is done without detectors, the signs detected on the barrier are as if the same particle passed simultaneously through both fissures, impacting the barrier in the form of wave.

This phenomenon occurred independently from the position of the detector and its being positioned ahead or beyond the crevices. The particles behaved as if they already knew there was something or someone watching them.

From this overwhelming discovery, a simple question raised: how did the particles know when there was someone or something watching them?

Here are the possible answers-questions.

- Is there a possibility that particles have an own consciousness, that they can foresee future?
- Do they have in themselves a resource of information that autonomously decides how to behave?

(At this point, some physicists exclaimed “this is no longer physics”)

Then, if all this is no longer physics, what is it?

From this question arose the need to piece together with the most possible rational inventive a jigsaw puzzle made from fragments of what I read, heard and discussed.

(We thus have the key to the boundaries with intrinsic evidence. An inheritance of, let’s say, genetic instructions, which affect the cell behavior.

The question is: what chance do we have to communicate to our cells, to establish a dialogue that could give us the possibility to reprogram them if in disarray and /or bring them back to good health, healing from diseases by wanting to want it? In alternative, would it be possible to use a device to intercept them?)

At this point LMLe’s approving snicker gave me the chance to add something.

Since everything is made of Atoms, the inheritance of instructions that the cells acquire, both by animating previous experiences and by being part of the Whole that does not know time-span but reads the events, makes the particles able to decide how to behave autonomously.

Knowledge comes from and goes back to the universal plasma of IPPA. IPPA is the energy of the micro and macro Cosmos, quantumly appeared, with no beginning nor ending. It has always existed. It is in all of us, it is only a matter of learning how to perceive it.

Ever since I met LMLe, I started thinking about writing all this. The picture that was slowly being outlined in all its perspectives gave a deeper significance to my risky questions-answers.

Furthermore, I understood the questions that by now it makes no sense to make.

(It is LuLe that, from the deepest dark of the unresponsive existential questions, from time to time gives me a glimpse of some light by freeing me from my nagging thoughts).

But let's proceed with order.

LML recounted about how everything took shape, thus creating the conditions for a material experience.

She talked about the intelligence of IPPA taking shape and becoming an unstoppable power.

The energies would have remained as they were for the eternity, without any other experience than the one they had known. A matter animated by them would have been the only alternative to experiment and increase the cognitive heritage, giving a constructive continuity to all events.

But what kind of life form could be the most suitable for this?

It was necessary to find an expression of matter that could be animated by the immense evolution of IPPA, something dynamic that could represent and experience its intelligence.

Who is then IPPA?

To find a definition using only one word would be a priceless achievement. I can only dare to imagine that his consciousness is made by infinite energies that allow everything to exist.

These energies form the universal plasma and, when the matter they belong to lose life, they leave it and carry with them only the experiences which can enrich the active power of IPPA. It goes without saying that the energies that keep useful experiences are very few.

Old civilizations firmly believed in this energy cycle. They built specific geometrical constructions to centrally energize electromagnetic fields, so that once the deceased was placed in the combustion chamber, his energy could be expelled in a precise astral position. These solid geometric constructions are still existing everywhere.

After this procedure, the bodies were then regularly transferred and buried in the necropolis, according to their social class.

Soul is a concept that was born from the philosophical thought of the ancient Greek world. Prior to this, men came into the world, lived and died without being aware of their Nous, considering themselves no more lasting than vegetable matter.

Then, there was the spark that became flame, hence energy that animates flesh and makes it all visible out of unawareness.

The history that is generally studied in schools is only a superficial gleam, inferred from intrinsic and equally superficial assumptions.

Below you are going to read a sequence of events, imaginary but perhaps not, about cosmos and life.

My try is of going further, beyond the culture of rationality. This need for the beyond also arises from the awareness that many of the things that are immanent today were once utopian.

A fetus in his mother's womb knows no other world than the amniotic sea. Maybe by waving his limbs he will perceive their potential use, but he will never realize their actual use in our world, so far to him unknown. And yet, even though he is already part of it, he is not aware to be bound to it through his mother's body.

In the same way, we too could be experiencing temporal space sensations just like a fetus. We can't see, perceive or know if we are in a super-gigantic womb.

Nothing prevents us from imagining ourselves as fetuses, who swim in a sea of plasma to us invisible, a sea made of pure but organized and conscious energy.

Are we all waiting for an astral birth?

Once birthed, what we will know?

Will we meet other forms of life like us?

Science tells us with more and more evidence that there are other worlds with possible living conditions. If that is the case, it is not said that these extraterrestrials or extra Universes are more evolved than we are. As far as I know, we have no evidence of these, yet.

(If we had met life forms from other worlds it would have meant that, having succeeded in coming to us, they are more evolved than we are. As it is, we may say that, since we have not seen them, they do not exist, but also that they haven't reached us yet. Another possibility is that "Aliens" are in contact with some dominant earthly Caste who do not consider it appropriate to let us know it.)

In the light of the above and considering the many incomprehensible phenomena that remain unanswered, including the innumerable constructions of which no one knows who made them and how they were made, the only alternative left is to continue investigating.

We must chase and snatch those additional responses that delay to arrive. Only by getting to know more likely versions, one can hope to find a way finally illuminated by other immanent answers.

The progression of languages and technique occurred through centuries may represent an issue. Scientific evolution involves a constant need to invent new words to explain new discoveries, new solutions and new ways of thinking. The diatribes on the translations of the ancient writings are still nourishing philology, semantics and etymology.

The ancient writer of millennia ago had a limited number of words at disposal. It is obvious that he felt the necessity to invent new words every time something was observed or struck his imagination for the first time.

To better explain what he had seen, he could put together a sequence of terms that gave an idea of the experienced event.

For example, observing an object of light moving fast in the air, this ancestor of ours could have said: "I saw a fire-like bird, going very fast in the sky".

Whoever reads these stories today is led to think, that they sound like childish tales.

We can't say that they are not, but not even that they are.

This may explain the diversity of versions of the same script and, I add, this also may apply to the different forms of art that often appear as real incognita.

I think that the only valid path to be pursued is to search and re-search, chasing with humility those versions that can be shared.

Said this, here the guesses...

The indefinite, timeless and not empty Vacuum contained different temperatures. This thermal variety triggered a kind of transmutation with extensive circular and condensed movements and, consequently, vibrations and frequencies phenomena.

Condensation and thermal dryness generated crystallization and some agglomerated minerals also became metals. These wandering lumps, frayed by grinding gravitational and magnetic forces, clashed and assembled, becoming planets and then galaxies.

The length of all this process is not ours to know, nor has it the least importance, since the time as we conceive it didn't exist.

The galaxies in their giant circular motion, the only possible in space, originated in universes of varying magnitude as soap bubbles. The universe to which we belong, once reached the border of the physical laws, will begin to collapse in a Singularity.

Attraction, Movement, Clash, Clutch between elements generated heat; and thermal phenomena, in the general meaning of the terms, are everything.

Henceforth modern science, which tracks several theories - one of which is the popping blast of Singularity - and all the laws of physics derived from them.

As far as living forms are concerned, the theories are:
evolution

We are the result of billions of years of evolution, achieved through the changes of structure that a single cell has made following its own, individual time. The evolution continued according to the environment where each cell lived, leading to the definition of different forms.

To this, we must add that, due to natural cataclysms, all forms of life have undergone severe selections.

Natural events such as the falling of meteors, giant eruptions, tectonic settlements and long periods of glaciation have led not only to random selection, but also to the extinction of many living beings.

The first to surrender were the biggest ones, slow and hardly able to find shelter. Versatility, agility and shrewdness turned out to be essential for survival, so, over the centuries the development of intelligence prevailed the power of strength.

Creation

A creative force has shaped the individual species from nothing. Or, created somewhere else, they were brought to earth by meteorites or other vehicles to imagine.

Creation and Evolution

Once cells were created, they underwent both natural evolution and genetic manipulation by unknown intelligences, thus starting a more evolved creature.

These theories are the result of human investigation and freedom of thought.

Here is what could have happened according to ancient stories engraved on clay tablets.

During one of the many days of about half a million years ago, while life, on our great Earth-land was placidly and with natural intelligence evolving, they, living being unknown to us, here mentioned as AlChi, landed on Earth, most probably fascinated by the colors that our world was projecting into the darkness of our solar system.

They were coming from a complicated planet which had had an orbit around our Sun for thousands of terrestrial years. On their world, the atmosphere was becoming more and more incompatible and this required a high-tech action or a new land to conquer and to host them.

Our Earth was at that time generous in nature, and the AlChi, once explored its ground and especially the underground, decided to stay (Thinking about it, as the AlChi had the trouble of their atmosphere, I reckon they did not appreciated our oxygen-rich air very much.)

Their appearance was like ours, but very tall, of white candied skin and with curly white hair.

(We would call them Albino Giants.)

The AlChi were divided into castes and there was a Chief whose appearance was hidden to the multitude. When he appeared, moving in the air in his transparent capsule, he was covered with a bright mask. He was gifted with dominant powers by using armaments that emitted disintegrating light beams. Same weapons, but less powerful, were also used by the lower caste ones.

The AlChi leader had a significant number of descendants and affiliates to his Gens acting as Delegate Governors, whom we call ArGos, who were responsible for controlling delimited areas.

The ArGos too, had strong powers; they were extremely advanced in genetics, biology, physics and mining engineering. They were also responsible of organizing territorial strategies and chose times, ways and places to operate.

Their appearance was hidden to our species, but they could turn up in other ways, performing a sort of camouflage among our living forms. (Thus started most of mythology.)

The ArGos commanded a group of generalships here mentioned as StraLes. The StraLes were moving in the air with their noisy capsules of light, they gave instructions to workers in the mines, controlled their outcome and cared for their affiliates. Some StraLes had a peaceful approach, believed in rational solutions, and could deal with the appropriate improvements; some other StraLes were impassive to peaceful coexistence as their cellular system did not contain this information.

Their decisions were taken and applied without considering the consequences that we would nowadays call humanistic.

It is the eternal law of duality that starts the events action.

ArGos intervened, when necessary, using terrestrial elements, such as water, fire, air, gravity and electromagnetism as deterring. By amplifying the natural effects of those forces, they created astonishment and submission.

They possessed technologies and machinery with which they easily drilled the hardest rocky soil, looking for Gold, the Hypnotizing Metal. Silver and other metals were also mined, evidently needed to achieve their technological goals.

This led to an unpleasant revolution of castes, as we see in the following lines.

Did they want these metals for a precise function?

Why did they give priority to the extraction of things, less attractive than terrestrial air for us pure, our climate, the beauty of the sea, the mountains, the vegetation, and all the wonderful peaceful beings that inhabited our planet then?

To these questions, we can theorize answers from translations of ancient writings that chance, through human determination, gave us, suggesting what might have happened millennia ago.

According to such translations, metals were pulverized and vaporized in the environment where they lived, so to create sterilized habitats against possible virus contamination. During these operations, AlChi leaders stayed close to the Earth's surface as precaution, as they were not sure whether they were susceptible to viruses or not.

I suppose somehow, they had protocols to protect themselves from inhaled infections. It goes without saying that the subordinates of the AIChi were genetically modified to better adapt to Earth conditions. Such genetic modifications, however, made them feel weaker in their own environment.

Metals were also used, once appropriately prepared, to create a barrier on the atmosphere of their world, so to rebound deadly substances that came from space and to avoid heat dispersion.

It was therefore a defense against air pollution and climatic cataclysms.

In those days, the metal extraction became so intense that it caused serious problems of survival to miners, whose bodies, after millennia of work, were worn out, leading to exhausting and increasingly intense periods of rehabilitation.

For the AIChi the time came to make a choice between the lives of their miners, and the resources that would save their world.

They looked around and decided it was worth to look among the species that inhabited our planet, to find some that could replace their miners. The first searches were made in forests close to mines, where creatures available in large numbers proliferated. We can guess the area as the Eastern-Central Africa.

Thus, they began anatomic, biological and genetic experiments on many of the animals and plants. It took thousands of land-years to have results that could prove an accomplishment possibility.

Taking the strength of an orangutan and crossing it with the agility of a chimpanzee was not enough, it was necessary for this new being to be nourished properly. The goal was to get proper mental development, so to understand language and consequently be aware of the instructions given.

Another important condition was to obtain a being that could stand upright and use hands to hold working tools.

This gave life to incredible births due to unnatural crosses. Several living species intertwined, giving rise to hybrids with bodies made up of multiple arms, equine with human busts, felines with wings of birds of prey, and more. These hybrids then generated other hybrids.

(So much mythology in all this!)

This procedure tells us that the AIChi went through attempts.

(I believe that yet today, even if formally looks like as a scientific research, genetic manipulation and cloning experiments continue. Who knows how many strange creatures, are living somewhere relegated.)

Thus, the wildest and most violent expression of hybrid living form started to inhabit our world.

But the AIChi did not stop, they had figured out various chances of success, and they continued genetic re-elaboration. In fact, the results obtained were increasingly successful. In addition to walking upright, the new beings proved to be of adequate intelligence and initiative. Furthermore, their larynx developed to the point of articulating a wide range of sounds.

The first new beings, which we call “hominids”, worked in mines. They were used to hard labor and to sudden death. For them, a female partner was developed for physically copulating and reproducing. Soon they were strengthening themselves, improving their intellect with solutions that extended their lives. In addition to this, they began to give birth to more evolved and resolute beings.

But the problems were not just due to the living conditions in the mines, even more worrying were the assaults to their families on the surface by the hybrid forms that were wildly running.

It was due to this disorder that the ArGos began to build hundreds of circular stone fences throughout the mining territory. These constructions served not only as protective barriers but also as energy centers for the transfer of metals.

Their former miners now lived on the earth surface, not only in defense of the Hominids families, but also to carry out the mining resources transshipment tasks to their cargo in the air.

It seemed to be an optimal balance, but the hybrids increased indiscriminately, and reached such a number that the AIChi, doubting to be able to control this phenomenon, began to plan a partial desertion from our world.

They decided that it was time to return to their planet, implementing its protection with the ore taken from the mines.

To actualize the departure, they had a time limit and windows of time to consider. Having to wait for the propitious time to sling into the proper space orbit.

Decisions were therefore to be taken by the leaders, everything had to be programmed by calculating how and when to implement the ballistic departure.

Once ready, the AlChi left on our Earth a few hundred ArGos and StraLes.

The ArGos were chosen among the upper caste and close to the dominant family. Without doubt they were the best biologists, genetic engineers and military strategists, and they were chosen because their knowledge and capability would assure the creation of a form of life which could be used as a bridge to further contacts or even to a return.

The ArGos noticed that the evolution of the Hominids was too slow and decided to speed up the process, with the study and the testing of further genetic modifications. This decision gave its results very quickly and shortly a new man, wiser and more skilled, was dominating with his intelligence over all other living species.

From here onwards, since the forced coexistence of men and hybrids had not led the latter to a better control of their aberrant nature, the ArGos began a period of studies to clean the Earth from the chaos they had generated. Years passed, and the females of Men became more and more pleasant, and the ArGos took as many as they wanted. This new and exhilarating experience inebriated the Argos and made the waiting time on Earth more pleasant. In addition, humans with some characteristics of AlChi came to the light.

These new forms of life had the somatic features of their earthly mothers, together with a greater intelligence and a deep sense of domination. Many of them were taller than average. Today we would call them giants. (This phenomenon could explain the mystery of many archeological constructions of which, still nowadays, we know neither the builders nor the building technology.)

In my country, there are islands where these giants lived, but this story was kept hidden as well as their tombs. Stories and findings intentionally hidden, because in contrast with the classic orthodox culture with which young students are normally nourished.

Fate, however, wanted tombs with human skeletons of giants to be found on Earth, witnesses of fascinating stories that should be part of our cultural legacy.

Another reason why giant tracks are so few, is that there were violent conflicts and AIChi's military technology reduced their number.

These fascinating stories suggest us parallelism, which are well identified in ancient poems, in the so-called sacred writings, in mythological stories, and in that branch of archeology considered irreverent and unacceptable.

To all this, we can add the several artifacts found in many of the ancient archeological sites of which no one can explain the technologies, if not taking into consideration the existence of living creatures more powerful than we are told.

We can even date them, but when we think in terrestrial terms, we do not have any answers to the type of technique used.

On the matter, the old academic world speaks of mysteries, but if we accept the possible interventions of the AIChi-Sapiens, everything becomes more understandable.

It goes without saying that those who built these artifacts had the technology to do so. But how and why they were made, the answer from cultural orthodoxy is that they are “mysterious wonders”.

Accepting instead that the ArGos had the ability to move from one continent to another, we will realize the similarities between constructions erected in different parts of the world. Buildings spread from Egypt to South Africa, from South America to the Pacific, from Mesopotamia to India, from Lebanon to Turkey and Europe display similar construction techniques, layout, decoration and position.

Looking at these artifacts without the filters of a certain culture we realize that they all have a common logic. See the thousands of pyramids and the hundreds of miles of underground city-galleries on Earth.

These city galleries could well be refuge for those more peaceful and rationally intelligent living beings. Here they could find shelter during period of danger, both from indiscriminate attacks of hybrid forms, and from glacial phenomena or devastating eruptions.

Returning to the ArGos and StraLes left on Earth after the departure of the AlChi, they shared and still share with us the experience of the world.

Their DNA continues its path in the Sapiens. This could explain why sometimes in the millennia there are genius births.

However, I think that some among the ArGos left on our world saw in the new human, now more efficient, an unexpected power.

A prevailing strength stronger than their weapons, a force that divides and joins at the same time, a force that generates eternity and gives delight in living, an invisible energy that can materially destroy.

Love was born.

It is the result of a chemical magic between two living individuals, and takes control of the mind to generate life.

When this frenzy begins to circulate in the body, it means that transmutation from invisible magic to obsession has already occurred. It is a kind of alchemy that makes us conscious, attracting the most suitable people to us. Real Love takes away your gravity, and that means freedom. If this does not happen, it just means to entertain each another.

Love also means an instinctively sacrifice of one's own life for another, and this was an unknown power to the AlChi.

This sensation disrupted them, not only at that moment, but in all the events to come.

Love is not just a feeling, it is a pure spiritual will that survives the matter. You can break the matter, but nothing can be done against a loving soul. Its strength is simply in its nature of inseparable innate determination.

Man does not decide to love or not, he just falls in love. Same thing for death, no one decides to die, he dies.

Below, an aspect of everyday life, described by a Greek Philosopher a few millennia ago. He wrote that during a dinner at a friend's house, all participants were explaining the origin of the magnetic attraction between two living beings. Well, one of them, a famous comedian and man of culture, gave his version saying:

« dear friends, at the beginning of our living existence, we were not as we look today as single creatures, but beings made by two powerful combined bodies. We were glued back to back, with two heads and we could move quickly in every direction with 4 legs and 4 arms. Our aspect was shown in three different characteristics;

- Two men
- Two women
- Man and Woman

The reason for which it was decided to separate them was their combined and excessive arrogance. The Olympic deities, offended by this attitude, ordered to surgically divide them.

It is from this occurrence that we are as we know, and – he added - we are individuals who are destined to live in an eternal quest for the lost partner.

Each time we find our missing half, the sensation of returning to one flesh, re-completing us, makes us experience the magic feeling that we call Love. »

Above all, it strikes people regardless of their sex.
A wonderful existential answer.

LMLe tells us that IPPA wanted to create a mechanism that could give an irresistible impulse of continuity. To do so with a certain logic, the growth of experiences that every energy achieved, while animating live beings, had to be compatible through continuity with the form of life previously animated.

But this did not occur.

It happened and it happens that as energy brings with it the experience of previous animations, some time they are not perfectly compatible with the new matter in which it is destined to live. A male identity in a female body or vice versa, will cause a cellular dyscrasia followed by physical and characterial complications.

Some forms of life are not materially compatible with the characteristics of the energy which animates them. It is not discrimination, it is just casual. There are more possible male or female life forms than those still in the process of being defined, if ever definition should occur. If all these potential life forms are not evident in our time it is only because the energies aimed at them have not returned yet.

In this regard, LiiLe says that unspecified forms, due to the hectic search for identity, are the most sensitive.

Yes, but why did this happen? Is it possible that IPPA was doing something wrong?

The answer is No, all this happened and happens, just to avoid coexisting too many compatible forms which can generate continuity. By doing so, an exponential increase of living being is avoided.

This new conscious strength (Love) was crucial to finally face the problematic of the hybrids.

The cultural lack of free will, the inhumane living forms, the high rate of mortality, due to the inadequate mechanical expansion, of the birth canal, gave no opportunity to form a human family, a society. A radical intervention was needed to eliminate those indefinable and destabilizing forms of life and to start a new order. A new, neater, society.

The solution, was not easy to find. The area to be reclaimed was vast and increasingly difficult to control.

The ArGos once evaluated the various possibility, chose to use the most available and versatile element, the water.

The areas to be flooded had large rivers and countless streams.

The descriptions traced in ancient stories, the many archaeological and geological findings, tell us that the solution applied took place in two steps:

- one, save and protect the Species for which they had worked for millennia, also in reason of the possible return of their AICbi leaders.
- two, create floating structures or high-hill areas, suitable for hosting specimens of this human, animal and vegetal multitude.

The choice of which living beings had to be preserved, was carried out not only according their physical aspect, but also by their role in the ideal food chain.

They planned the possible deviation of the course of the major rivers in the designed areas and the signal of the most favorable moment for this extraordinary journey was given by the natural happening of events.

A combined phenomenon of apocalyptic eruptions from the Great Lake centre and the fall of the meteorites (rerouted to hit the Earth) occurred.

The sky was darkened by the dust and a long period of torrential rains with consequent rising of the water level followed.

So it started the adventure of the living species we know today, which are still traveling in space on board of the Earth ship. We are the result of an almost impossible evolution and randomness.

For months bodies floated on the waters, while the ArGos, from safe places of the Earth, waited for the purification to come to an end.

Hundreds of thousands of hybrid creatures born from new women and non-terrestrial fathers were drowned or devoured by marine species.

Their lifeless bodies nourished not only all the animals of the sea but they also fertilized the emerged lands for a long time.

This flood or period of pseudo-defrosting has become the most popular story, written and recounted by all the people of our world to entertain and warn young people during the long winter nights. So, it was, and so it will continue to be in the years to come.

How long did this expedition last? How long could they survive with the limited food reserve? We cannot know it.

But one day it ended, the sky went back to its heavenly colors, the dawn to its pink standard, the sunset to its red hues. The legend says that birds from the nearby mountain coastline announced with their cry the approaching of the landing.

The doorways opened up on high valleys, where vast fresh meadows were waiting for being crumbled. The swarm of creatures reborn in their environment was an unrepeatable show.

To witness this new world, there are hundreds of rock paintings that still show us, as in a catalogue, the after-flood living forms, both in their appearance and in their activities. These paintings of our ancestor's first artists can be considered the first film on the first set ever shot.

The charm of Earth had returned, its mild climate, its green and blue scenery, its new-order inhabitants, all of this changed the ArGos profoundly. They also came to rebel against the provisions left by the AlChi.

Yes, the fellowship between the ArGos, the StraLes and some Sapiens implanted the foundations of our history.

Time went by, and each creature started living in its own habitat, a new life began. An existence articulated by a more ordered food chain, and men who, exploring as far as they could, continued to reproduce themselves in a more appropriate way.

The AlChi DNA, transmitted through the ArGos, remained in the forefather family of man. The commander of the flood event continued as referent of the ArGos.

He had light skin and white-blond hair kinky like wool, he was born from a father of another world and from an Earthly mother.

At this point, the ArGos hybridized a new grain and new plants with their advanced bio-genetic knowledge, producing a more adequate nourishment for the new humanity.

The use of vine, legumes and other vegetable variety was discovered, and to convey the genetic purity of the forefather family, copulating between brothers and sisters born from different father but by same mother occurred. Besides making the new forms of nutrition compatible, the ArGos, or whoever for them, also used genetics for healing.

The point that remains bolted in transcendence is: how can we talk to the memory of our cells to make them heal?

What method can we apply to interact with our cells when they are altered by a disease?

Can cells be reprogrammed with the sole will to want it, and consequently regenerate their own health?

Did the ArGos had devices able to intercept the point-time of when the diseased cells were still healthy, and bring them back to their initial status? Or was it just the strength of IPPA, who, in some way informed, replaced the unhealthy cells with regenerated healthy ones?

This automatism still to be understood will make the difference in our history.

We live between flashes of true transcendence and healing, and blazes of excess which distort the cellular harmony. He, who finds a good balance between these two forces, will live longer.

It goes without saying that whoever has created and made possible this mechanism lives in the whole.

In ancient writings, it is often said of deities who conceived children with terrestrial females, and thus continued the descent of the so-called demi-deities. ArGos were increasingly attracted by the result of their manipulations, up to the stage of feeling love affection. This became one of the most relevant cause of conflicts among the dominant strategies of both ArGos and StraLes.

The latter were messengers who often traveled on noisy vehicles, fading in the clouds of light.

These stories experienced by ancient peoples are the stories of massive emigration conducted by the various ArGos, made of unbelievable schemes and parallelisms, where we read about births from women not conventionally inseminated. Yes, but why?

(There is a lot of mythology in all this!)

Answer:

It was not materially possible, and as an additional value mysterious births were more convincing and/or considered divine.

This means that the AlChi men were not compatible with Sapiens female. But not the ArGos or the StraLes, who could take possession of a female body with their consent. A kind of assisted insemination but from the inside.

All this new life functioned, it only required a final touch, something that could create dependence had to be invented.

Something which could be the solution during crisis of solitude and pain.

Something that could be the answer, while thinking of the “Oltre” (beyond imagination), someone willing to listen to our desperation when everything seemed irreversibly lost. A feeling of transcendence, that could create faith on the mystery of life.

Something that, in the case of disobedience, would create fear of eternal punishment in the afterlife. Who could ever return from the underworld to tell what really happens there?

A painless addiction needed to be induced, a “Faith”.

But let’s take a step back to when the AlChi leaving the Earth had designated the place that each ArGos was assigned to unify and govern.

ArGos’ inheritors were three, and to ensure that these sites were well identified, they began massive ethnic activities.

This phenomenon created a bit of languages disorder, but I must say that it also produced progress. The intersection of the different experiences, once together, summed up in an organic system.

In this case the migratory flows went toward Sunset (West means the Sunset land). The incognita, the adventure, but also the conviction that following the Sun meant chasing life, light, and mystery.

Many, departed from today’s Mesopotamia area to the Great Lake and to the West, found a river like the one they knew, and more advanced ethnicities. This made them decide to settle down.

Here a familiar Ethnic group, which we call FaPes, was destined to the various ArGos. A group chosen because of their characteristics, known to be impetuous, intelligently tenacious and of monotheistic tendency.

A new demography was emerging, so the story very close to us, began.

Well, everything seemed to come to the best but, as often happens within families, the contrasts and angers about the inherited lands did not delay.

It was from this moment that violent contrasts began between ArGos broke out. They did not spare violence, and to avoid losing control over their ethnicities they even used unconventional weapons to the Terrestrials. There were winds at a very high temperature, until melting rocks and evaporating the bodies of any living form in the affected areas.

The ArGos wanted and still want today, and perhaps forever will want, the control of a land improperly promised to ONE of them. A land whose allocation has never been precisely allocated.

The Land of NaLa.

This ONE and last in the order of appointment, we will call him NoMe. He was the unhappiest of all. There was no sound that could pronounce its name.

LuLe recounts that the AIChi, at the very last moment before leaving the Earth, remembered of NoMe. They knew the status quo along that coastal area at the center of the Great Lake, and having observed in a deserted area some exiled tribes' encampments, they decided to entrust NoMe with an immense task. He, was entitled to unite these ethnic groups and to give them a homeland.

Soon the unification process developed in all its turbulence. People destined to NaLa's land were hard to keep under control and turning them into a nation required all the dynamism of NoMe. His willpower came from the promise that the AIChi had made to him, that the land of NaLa was going to be exceptionally energetic, fertile and strategically dominant. So, it was at the time of the AIChi. They knew very well this territory, as the launchpad for their journeys to our world used to be right there.

NoMe began to control these tribes by adopting indirect strategies. He could not physically show himself as one of them, it was not in his plan. He had to choose someone who represented him and spoke on his behalf. Only by doing so, he could infuse fear and be considered divine.

It was because of these peculiarities that NoMe chose as an interpreter and leader a man of great culture and undoubted reliability.

This very special person, whom we call TemLe, came on the stage of history with the typical birth of those legends designated to create epic events. He came to the bank of a river, floating in a basket.

Of his youth, not much is known. He was certainly educated at the court of a noble family, and this allowed him to follow the doctrines reserved only to the clergy of this powerful country. A polytheistic civilization, but also acquainted with monotheism and trinitarian function.

In this environment, TemLe learned sciences such as astronomy, the phenomenon of magnetic fields, vital energies applied to medicine, alchemy and architecture.

His predisposition to learning made him a true charismatic master and leader.

It must be said that the clergy of this civilization consisted of powerful priests. They practiced total control over the transcendental life of their rulers. The sophisticated clerical strategies applied at court, drew the regents to make them believe they were deities.

Their ego, luxury, comfort, entertainment, pleasure, the best teachers, made the rulers live for the most part of their lives locked in their palaces.

The rare appearances they offered to the people were so dazzling, that they created wonder and submission.

The temples of this kingdom were very rich, they received money and real estate donations, precious votive offerings, tax breaks, thus becoming real financial institutions.

It goes without saying that the megalomaniac rulers in turn, to maintain their status, had a tremendous need for money. The mega-constructions needed to justify their pseudo-divinity were very expensive. And here the circle closed, as the only solutions were loans from and compromises with the clergy. In addition to this, if we add the control that temples boasted over innumerable and inert proselytes, the picture of why the people had a miserable life, becomes a true high definition show.

Once adult, TemLe learned he did not belong to the family who had raised him nor to the people who had educated him. He had then to leave that country he did not belong to. But how? He reported he had a vision, a transcendental power ordering him to go with his family, and all those people he considered to be of his same race, to another land. A land which belonged to them by legacy, as this was the place from where they came from.

That said, he began preparations to leave the kingdom that for decades had housed, nurtured and educated him.

TemLe took his family and many relatives, and the emigration began, emptying the country's productive power.

It was at this point that the authoritative leader of this kingdom gave rise to every possible initiative to block this massive departure.

TemLe became so the protagonist of repeated hateful events caused by the ArGos. It was only after these disastrous phenomena that TemLe could depart with his multitude.

On the way from the west to NaLa, TemLe met with the other tribes to which he had been assigned as a guide, and it was only at this point that he realized the colossal enterprise he had to face.

Convincing this unruly multitude to become a People, the People, was only possible with the help of NoMe.

TemLe had to form a command hierarchy that with their ability could educate this new mass movement.

Producing and enforcing rules of coexistence often caused excessive rebellion, and whenever this happened, TemL asked NoMe to show up with his power.

But NoMe always answered in the same way "I cannot show up, because if I do, it will be the last thing you all will see."

Obviously, if NoMe had revealed himself he would have massacred everyone and at this point who could report what? The response did not include a possible reply. The penalty was death.

The conversations between NoMe and TemLe, always took place in lonely places and far away from the crowd's gaze.

One of these meetings became epic.

It is said that this event took place on a mountain amid a desert. Here, the silence of the most transcendental imagination reigned.

NoMe appeared to TemLe in a definitely peculiar way to avoid him any harm.

Indeed, TemLe, while meditating, perceived some presence without being able to identify the origin. But then, looking at a specific point in the mountain, he saw a burning rock where the bushes, while still on fire, remained green. He understood.

NoMe already knew the difficulties faced by TemLe, in keeping order among his people. And with attention, he listened to the rules TemLe thought adequate to begin a coexistence, that could finally bring order.

Free will was acceptable for small decisions, but common living standards should not be transgressed, punishable as they were by terrible penitence.

The rules that TemLe agreed with NoMe are still the basis of good coexistence for most of humanity.

What has changed is how transgressions are pursued. Today punishments are no longer the dreaded consequences of those days, ergo, rigid rules have become vague suggestions.

According to ancient stories, it was after these events that a common monotheistic belief was born, a faith which convinced this new caste to have a privileged destiny.

Let's not forget the transcendental preparation that TemLe had had during his youth. The country that hosted him had then a state-of-the-art religious system. Here TemLe had learned firstly from the polytheistic and later from monotheistic clergy the procedure that the noble rulers had to go through in the presence of deities, during their post-mortem journey. The practice consisted in a sort of confession, a declaration of their moral, religious and civic integrity, a list of the acts in life which had made them eligible for eternal afterlife.

Now, all these acts and procedures became part of the laws agreed with NoMe but lost their character of spontaneity and were strictly codified. Abiding to the laws was essential to the new system.

A fantastic idea and a brilliant solution.

After the epic encounter with NoMe, TemLe went back to his people with the new rules, but he found that, in his absence, they had attempted a rebellion, made a statue of gold and worshipped it as their god. With this situation, NoMe had to help TemLe with drastic decisions to allow the new directives to be accepted.

From this moment until his arrival in the land of NaLa, punishments for transgression were lethal for the most undisciplined, but they resulted useful to unite the people under one faith and common ideals.

It is from this moment that human history has been strengthened with the concept that man can feel free to decide about daily actions, but also that the AIChi reserved to decide their ultimate destiny.

That was brilliant.

But also in the land to them designated to settle life was not easy. Nomadic people with their same claims, led by other ArGos of the same rank as NoMe, lived there

Finding out to whom was destined NaLa, if it ever was, is a story of an absurd ethnic fight that has filled, fills, and will fill until the end of time, pages of history.

Are ArGos still in conflict with each other?

Yes, since after all those millennia, they still cannot prevail over each other.

Almost at the same time, a great and epic war broke out among living populations in the Northeast of the Great Lake.

An ethnic group named “The Guardians of the Strait” had built a fortress citadel at the mouth of the canal that unites the Great Lake to the Black Lake. From this position, they imposed on all the boats in transit the payment of a pecuniary tax or a forced withdrawal of goods. It was not a coastal guard, but under the payment of a fee they guaranteed merchants a safer navigation.

This contribution-taking, apart from the ethical aspect, if there ever had been one, caused considerable economic losses for the trade of the various independent states that flourished on the shores of the Great Lake.

To better focus how important was the Black Lake destination, it should be noted that on these shores there were the ports of access to the richest and most developed markets, both Eurasian and Middle Eastern.

To stop this elegant forcing operated by The Strait Guardians required some solution operated by the leaders of the different city-states and the commercial fleet lenders.

No doubts, the citadel of the Strait had to be neutralized, but without declaring war openly. It was necessary to lead the guards of the strait to commit a serious wrongdoing.

A meeting was so scheduled, in which took part valued strategists and trusted advisors representing the courts of the Great Lake city-states. During this meeting, I imagine very animated, the final solution was taken. It seemed trivial, but from the diplomatic point of view resulted to be incredibly effective.

They chose one of the Strait Guardian’s Prince, among the youngest and fieriest, inviting him informally for a diplomatic visit to one of the most evolved cities in the Great Lakes.

In this town, lived a queen of legendary beauty and irresistible manners. Someone, it seems to be a poet, wrote that she had an “anesthetizing beauty”.

The husband king of this rare charm was more than aware of this strategy but, although reluctantly, had to recite his role so that everything could be accomplished. Besides, he had agreed with his noble friends for the well-being of his people and allies.

A few months passed and the invited prince was received with all honor at court. Here, after the opportune duties, he learned of the sudden departure of the king. One of his noble allies had died on a nearby island few days of sailing away, and he had to honor with his presence the royal funeral.

Left alone with the gorgeous queen, the hosted prince was so infatuated, that he planned to kidnap her.

The escape was organized with the queen consent and she took with her so much luggage that the organization of this trip was worth a fiction masterpiece.

Everything went as planned.

Eros had anesthetized the rationality of the handsome prince who, of a youthful and therefore comprehensible impetuosity, was only at beginning of the tragedy.

The escape-kidnapping, even though conducted with the complicity of the queen, was considered an unforgivable offense to the ethics of royal hospitality. Indeed, this insolence was the motive they were already prepared for, and it did not take long to start the offensive.

All the armies of the said City State coalesced to punish the betrayal of a woman, avenge the offence to hospitality and the violation of the honor of one of the allied king-partner.

Truly genial, the Guardians of the Strait had their days numbered.

The conflict was epic and long, and was reported as the “History of Stories”.

Thus, a well-articulated revenge, pretentiously based on the honor of one of the giant leaders, was fought for the triumph of profit.

It was the War for Antonomasia, a conflict meant to eliminate a tribe controlling a strategic point of the Great Lake.

Even in this case, the factions that faced each other were supported by the various ArGos, who made each front believe they, the deities, were fighting to change the course of events in their favor. In the real happening of events, everything was already predestined.

The details of this conflict were reported by a great poet, blind man, who lived a few centuries later. He belonged to the most intelligent civilization known to us.

His writings have significant parallelisms with previous stories, even those told by poets living in the East, the Middle East and North Europe. In these stories, in addition to captivating semi-deities and giant's battles, the leitmotiv is Nostalgia, a sentiment that forces heroes to return to their country, to their own family, especially if they are winners.

The return has always been a fulfilling feeling, the return to one's home, the cares of beloved ones, an emotion that prizes and awards.

These intentionally recycled parallelisms have simply been adapted to the times going by. And this could have happened with the so-called "inspired and /or sacred" writings.

One of the many parallelisms of great interest, which we find in the old stories, is based on sacrificial procedures. The daily-required victims were always the similar: newborn humans and animals, oxen, goats, lambs and more. As the same was the butchery system:

- drain the blood of victims up to the last drop;
- burn the fats of precise anatomical parts (thighs, kidneys, liver, intestines) until they are consumed;
- add specific herbs and substances creating as much smoke and aroma as possible;
- have large quantities of alcohol available during rituals to drink or to spray on roasted slices.

The fumes generated by what had been burned, if inhaled, had calming and analgesic power, inebriating both ArGos and their priests.

According to ancient writings, all the above mentioned was performed daily and regulated by very detailed rules.

But, why these calming procedures? Were they excited and in need of quietness and control? Yes, both ArGos and clergy, breathing aromatic fumes, felt appeased. They were doped by them.

An additional confirmation of these procedures is found in some Oriental philosophies, whose ancient texts clearly mention that during sacred ceremonies a specific animal fat, called clarified butter, was required.

This interesting religious system believes in the multiplicity of lives and reincarnation from previous experiences. Those who practice this discipline can purify and elevate themselves spiritually, fleeing material life through the practice of fasting and asceticism.

The transcendence of this belief blends with the forces of nature. The various levels of wisdom are achieved through meditative practice. The so-called enlightened stages are very high, and it is this that states the different clerical hierarchies.

But, sadly, the people who practice this transcendence are living in a discriminating system. Their social life is governed by the fact that, being members of a castes apparatus, they live in divergence with their peace-loving ideology.

It should also be said that in their writings one can often read about the importance of gold, one of the possible use of which was to sterilize the environments in which ArGos and StraLes lived.

During the same centuries, other pseudo-spiritual systems were born in more eastern locations. Here too, worshipers and followers wrote about leaders considered spiritually wise.

These ideologies are accurate ethical treatises, on the rules of good coexistence and on how to relate to family, work, and governors.

The list of these civilizations with their evolutions is repetitive. They appear, proliferate, dominate, and then come to an end. What is left are their technological and cultural goals, recycled in collective progress.

The interesting part of this culture is that all these peoples, even though they did not know each other, wrote about the same humanistic experiences. So, who could have brought or generated the same learning on the various continents of our planet?

And why did most of these doctrines rise in just two centuries?

But I want to push further, and considering the psycho-existential problems that we are hitting on, it is clear that there are still broad margins to improve, both individually and collectively, physically and spiritually.

To what I have just written, I would like to add some thoughts on the vanishing of individuals and entire tribes. People of which no traces about their destination has been found so far.

These disturbing events could only be explained imagining that AIChi occasionally withdraw them to continue the upgrading studies.

It has been for millennia, since the beginning of human life, that the traces of their DNA have grown in us.

Their stories are sometimes hidden in mythological legends, often rendered incomprehensible by classical culture. But if you read them using the spiral method, scraping what is useless and misleading, proceeding from the shell to the core, then you will identify “the seed idea”.

Our evolution has exponentially conditioned the presence of the AIChi or who for them, which, to continue to follow human events become increasingly disguised. It was the scientific-cultural development, that has brought to the fore facts and places up to now of exclusive dominion of their castes.

Today apparitions and experiments continue, and the manipulation of new conceptions will create new humans.

The pathway of civilizations is to pursue new knowledge, to stay up to date, and to move in the genetic exchanges of the massive emigration.

New sciences will give us new means of communication, to which new transcendental goals will follow.

Transcendence, is the constant that leads us to look Beyond.

We must chase answers to the usefulness of our lives, we must hope that our story is useful. And again, I do not speak of reason to live as the ultimate end, it might not exist.

I do not remember, but among the many writings I have read and sometimes lived, the most appropriate image for the reason of life, is that our Earth is an Altar traveling, not infinitely but in the infinite. Humanity with its history has been and will be sacrificed on this altar, for the benefit of the future. Our lives with our experimented experience will not pass in vain. It is the price that billions of living beings must pay so that the future can be lived in an existential Eden next to IPPA.

To look Beyond also means to ask somehow for help, and the AIChi were well aware of this need. The mysterious phenomena regarding miraculous events have created a powerful instrument of addiction and control, “Faith”

It is along faith that goes a need for charismatic referrals. Someone who takes your worries, your doubts away, and that somehow has new fulfilling answers. Somebody able to give certainty of being related to a powerful and omnipotent will.

In this regard, I would like to mention a significant event that took place, few millennia ago. A birth that still fills miles of pages.

It is said that it was a StraLes who announced to a woman of NaLa her mysterious pregnancy. The paternity belonged to faith, as in the most beautiful mythological stories of previous civilizations.

Once again, LmLe tells us that IPPA, to further test his immense experience, wanted to live as a man.

The advent of his prodigious incarnation took place in the land of FaPes, and the signs of this unique and unrepeatable birth were noticed throughout the Middle East.

Who and why was aware of it?

Why right there in that specific area of the world under the jurisdiction of NoMe?

And why NoMe did not want this event to happen?

And why he was not present at the delivery?

Once again, the evolution of new transcendental horizons, updated and renewed the story.

But I must add that in this case, the message was indeed new, if not revolutionary.

He, the new born, who we call BaJe, made things inexplicable to the most. He was pure energy Pre-AlChi, an energy that was here to witness the whole Living One.

After millions of years from the beginning of life, after hundreds of thousands of years of ruthless and unnatural events, IPPA turned out to be in our world in the form of Sapiens.

For the living people who accepted it, a message of self-sacrifice and tolerance for all, without distinction, was given. In the awareness of experiencing a reason of life, in the imperfection, contrast, duality.

How his true story has gone, it is not of primary importance, His Message is the true revolution.

But even in this case, mystifications prevailed on the less informed. In this case as well, there were fights against the injustices of ancient faiths.

The strongest were the most powerful to impose manipulated theologies and liturgies.

Centuries of injustices and disasters followed. To let the human being's monstrosities go through without his interference was the evidence of his experimenting.

Mental imperfection, humanistic inequities, power euphoria, make people reach sad targets, even in religious systems, with no exception.

The power of the word, used with subtle oratory techniques, can really anesthetize and every system has caused and will cause millions of victims.

Not much is known of BaJe, no one knows where he lived for most of his brief existence among men. But in this short time, he left life instances so far unthinkable.

When BaJe enlightened the new visions of life to ordinary people - peasants, fishermen, craftsmen, shepherds and more - he often used the parable story technique or they would not understand. There is no trace of his studies, nor of his writings.

On the other hand, the speeches he gave to the erudite FaPes were constructed with a true master language, and his amusing eloquence was rejected with reluctance and fear.

It was more than obvious that erudite scholars could not accept these new humanistic visions. Accepting the existential concepts that BaJe explained, would have meant to deny those doctrines that gave them wealth and power. Not to mention the physical consequences that they would have had to face from their avenging proselytizers.

But even here, everything had to have a logic, BaJe could not stay in this world or could for long. His death was essential to start the mystery.

The path that began its human end was ended down by his FaPes's proselytes. The new doctrine ended with a clear and cruel event, so that it would be never forgotten.

Whoever steered the story, the people and the events knew that putting an end to BaJe's life with a torture would start a new vision of the Beyond.

BaJe followed his predestined fate, He was condemned by his tribe. The divergences with the dominant strategies and procedures of the Fapes clergy, were intolerable.

But here is the genius of IPPA.

After his burial, few days went through when the StraLes made the body of BaJe disappear, to take him to the realms of universal plasma. However, he himself had said that his kingdom was not of this world, and that he had a father to reach in heaven.

From this event, of which countless versions were written - and still more will be, few centuries passed and a new episode shook the world.

Reading carefully the ideology of this new thought, that later became a faith, I can say that, there have been continuous and obsessive studies of progressive parallelism believed to be of “divine inspiration”.

After hundreds of deities, prophets, theologians and illuminated beings, ArGos and not, once again, from an eremite here mentioned as LeSco, a new dogma was born.

The strategy of this attentive ascetic and psycho-history scholar, who had had the opportunity to meditate on ancient texts, was of realizing the unrepeatable possibility of rewriting a new version.

The Sagacious thought that, since it had worked for other ethnicities, why not to try with an adapted version that will suit the expectations of the countless tribes he belonged to? Again, we see in this new story the shadow of the ArGos. They were going to repeat, in an up-to-date version, the strategies of a few millennia back, occurred between NoMe and Tem-Le.

The secret consisted of a custom-made religious dress that had the elegance to attract the attention of the people to whom LeSco belonged. A dress that, like a uniform, united, elevated and strengthened the identity of his tribes.

The previous outfits had the same strategy. Some invented for a few, others sewed not to be identified with specific places.

LeSco in the progression of his project grafted a “new” philosophy, a behavioral code of support that could give additional power to males.

Among the many rules, the women's bodies were considered inciting and misleading, but as they were impossible to eliminate, it was decided to hid them in garments.

It is quite clear that this was dictated by the Strales, who in their history often pointed out that they would not respond of their sexual assaults if women were not entirely dressed in appropriate body coverages.

Let's see.

Living bodies are structured to emit smells, colors, movements, sounds, expressions, and reactions that magnetize each other emotionally.

A covered body exposing only hands and eyes does not involve emotionally with all its possibilities, so the person who looks at it is not fully alerted by these provocations.

The result, according to LeSco, was a more orderly life model, attentive to the roles dictated by nature.

Here I would like to add a comment:

After millennia, it can be anthropologically asserted that the male supremacy has been iniquitous but also physiologically inevitable.

The impossibility for women to participate in tribal life, imposed by their nature during multiple cycles and pre-post pregnancies, gave males the chance to become dominant.

The strongest one took the control of transcendental life, of culture, defense, economics and construction.

Today, values and roles have changed, there is no danger of survival of the species, culture is accessible to all, male and female identity is scrambled, and both of them work together on the growth of the offspring and family management.

What happened:

- we were completely naked and it was a paradise,
- we gradually covered ourselves and the promiscuous relations began,
- bodies have evolved and the pleasing dependencies have taken control,
- to get undressed in order to return to the origins is not possible for many reasons,

- at moment, we dress and undress according the individual power of the free will,
- this means that we engage ourselves emotionally according to what we decide is convenient.

What will happen:

- that part of human beings who still lives covered, looks at those who live in the excess of free will as to be a promiscuous lifestyle. Their point of view is so determinate that they fight with all their force, even violent, to annihilate or slow down their evolution.
- on the contrary, those who live in the excesses of free will, not being able to give up their pleasures-addiction, will increasingly consider regressive all the others. As a result, they will live armed in their technology.

Considering what above written, we must point out that our body lacks the organ that controls and regulates the powerful mechanism of attraction between two bodies, both in reception and in transmission, without distinction of sex.

This imperfection is the major cause of disorder.

LeSco was aware with this dyscrasia, he knew that by including in his doctrine the male control, he would serve on a golden plate what his people liked very much.

But to make a doctrine out of all this, the message had to be folded in mystery. A mortal, it does not matter how wise and honest, has very little chances of making proselytes when speaking out for himself.

It was essential to give this idea a transcendental origin, a source that was unequivocally considered as divine.

The script needed to be transmitted gradually and randomly and the message was to come from a supernatural entity. It was only necessary to find someone who had charisma and innocence enough to accept the role of messenger. Someone who, accidentally passing by that place of solitude, could be catechized to never reveal the identity of LeSco or the place where they were meeting.

The promise that sealed the beginning of this covenant was the belief that the chosen one would have been revered for the millennia to come.

This new leader, mentioned here as LoyPe, was completely devout. The strength of LeSco's words were so convincing, that LoyPe had no doubts about his mission, he was ready for the last sacrifice.

During the indoctrination period, each time LoyPe returned to his village after months of absence, he recounted, with the sole strength of memory, his visions and the thoughts transmitted to him by a transcendental power. These stories were of great impact to his listeners.

Once again, the mystery functioned.

It is in the fertile soil of the lazy acquiescence that the seed of mystery creates faith, because faith leads to the transcendence, and the celestial hope is the answer.

It took a lot of time, marked by LoyPe's memorizing power, but it eventually worked.

It worked because those who had conceived and planned it knew that most of humanity cannot ignore transcendence.

It worked because LeSco tied these stories to the psyche of the tribe to which he belonged, and of which he had a profound knowledge.

LoyPe, became a true charismatic leader.

This new philosophy did work, even though, as in previous similar cases, it had to face conflicting views of considerable violence.

Here the ArGos intervened through the StraLes, as having to protect and maintain their masculinist power, they could not remain neutral, as that would have spoiled their story.

This is the key contrast with the Western world.

What great stories, made of parallelisms and of proselytizers, and all of them born in an area of a few hundred square kilometers, a stripe of land on the banks of the Great Lake.

The same area originally chosen by the AIChi, to experiment and eventually proliferate.

Observing in general the stories of these Covenants or Apparitions, wanting to quantify the number of constructions dedicated to these events of transcendence, we can add that every time, in different parts of the world, one of these mystical phenomena occurred the demand made by these Visions was always the same.

Build sanctuaries, so that they become sacred to the crowds and vital to their activities and prosperity. So that they become the core of any city, of any business and human activity.

Build, and improve building technology, always and anyway.

Technology is commonly used to assess the degree of civilization of a people.

The parameters are:

- architectural harmony of both public and private religious buildings;
- viability and the green;
- civic living style and comfort;
- political order;
- financial resources and wealth;
- power of defense and offense;
- artistic life and entertainment.

Technology always wins, however, the intuitive Sapiens has more technological solutions.

Technology does not waste time with emotions, it does not know holidays, does not ask for rest, it only needs a little energy and maintenance.

And the history of construction continues. There is always something to be built, bigger, higher, more imposing, more impossibly, more expensively, there is always more need for loans from Banks, more building companies, and consequently more and more political decisions.

And if to this we add disasters such as tsunamis, earthquakes, floods, eruptions, destructions, we see that constructions and reconstructions are consequences of the same strategies.

It looks like the AIChi or who for them, would somehow cause all this like a never-ending strategy. They lead technology, they lead history. I think this can really be possible.

All of this reminds me of a sentence from the FBI Director Edgard Hoover, I think it is self explanatory:

“The individual is handicapped by coming face-to-face with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists. The American mind has not realized of the evil which has been introduced into our midst. It rejects even the assumption that human creatures would espouse a philosophy which must ultimately destroy all that is good and decent.”

I think he was aware of many things to us forbidden to know.

In this regard, I must objectively add:

Every time we listen to a politician making decisions that seem blasphemous, totalitarian, provocative, foolish, we should be more cautious to give negative assessment. Maybe, they know of facts the access to which is forbidden to us for our own security.

Of course, there are cases where the politicians themselves, to justify certain biased decisions, make us understand they are in possession of news they do not have.

And here comes the eternal diatribe on intellectual honesty, on democratic values and ethics. Another never-ending story.

Management strategies, advanced techniques and building formulas have been increasingly rooted in chameleon-dominant castes.

The gap between them and the rest of the world is so deep that they act on us like a black hole does with the space around it: you know that it is there only because you see its effects on light and matter. With castes, the light becomes darkness.

It is the beginning and end of the system, technique is always the solution, but for it to function, economy is needed, and economy requires political decision. So, the circle closes.

Another aspect of our life that confirms the need for transcendence is the easy birth of Systems, Groups and Sects of Religious groups.

These new trends, invented by experts here named as PlaPro, are born from enticement techniques, the aim of which is to make proselytes.

It is quite simple, just take a book of any ideology that has millions of proselytes, study it deeply to catch the main points of transcendence, eliminate or modify those less incisive, adapt it to a previously identified user and the game is done. A new faith is ready.

At this point, just start conferences in the right places and in a short time the PlaPro has a new religious establishment that lives on an annuity.

There has always been and always there will be someone willing to believe in something.

The most worrying thing is that, at some point in these stories, when manipulations are revealed, proselytes do not get angry with those who have misled them. Instead, they protect them. It's just crazy, the way the proselytes react. They hide and fall into the moving sands of coercion stories, mass suicide and psychic addiction.

So what's wrong with us?

If we know that for decades we have followed a belief that was the result of manipulated rewritten versions, why do not we abandon it?

Are we too lazy, or just the idea of having to look for something else to believe makes us live in oblivion?

Or maybe we do not want others to think that we have been gullible?

Thinking of it, I can certainly say that the primary limit is set by the individual degree of laziness, as well as by the reverential fear for some clerical lobbies.

By doing so, shaking and hesitating, thousands of years pass by, the so-called sacred stories are heard from others, and at the same time immense authorities of control become monetary corporations.

But I must add that this is changing, the rise of PlaPro and the easier access to ancient writings is giving us new versions. The most profound philological techniques, combined with more powerful translation tools, see the massive databases, allowing real-time semantic comparison, are highlighting discordances between the various interpretations. This might be, as it is said, a double-cut weapon, because together with the shared versions, there are lecturers who wallow in them in blatant shows.

As a result, the listener is increasingly confused, and the PlaPro, knowing that we are too busy looking for expedient to survive, make us believe what we like to hear.

Too much power in the word.

Word, sound, vibration, frequency, harmony, repetition, obsession, all this enters through our receptive sensors in our brain. Here in the data processing center, it is translated according to individual culture. Hence outward behaviors arise.

The Word is powerful, creative, causes hate and addiction, loves, kills, hugs, anesthetizes, evaluates, despises, cares, colors, warns, spies, does not say, sells, creates well-being, destroys.

We are automatons who live with the feeling of living in a free-will regime.

I have read somewhere that we wake up, eat, dress, work, pray, play, and reproduce ourselves as the market tells us to do.

What great news! Finally, there is someone caring about us.

Yes, the occult ArGos-Caste, make sure that we are awake and dedicated to consumerism. Furthermore, during those moments of dedication to transcendence, we are happy to abandon ourselves to the PlaPro speeches.

Perfect!

What inexcusable waste of life, to spend in such a way the short time we are given to live.

The blame is hidden in the power of the constitutions, in the labyrinth of the endless laws, in the meaningless protocols, in the pseudo-justice, in the financial dances, in the philosophical and religious diatribes. These are the deviant causes poisoning our thinking.

Here are the numbers confirming the strategic targets of PlaPro:

- 60% of humanity cannot think, is hungry.
- 30% live anesthetized in well-being of caused consumerism.
- 9.99% are the angry thinkers, and among these, only a small part is trying to extend the life of our world.
- 0.1% are those of supreme in power (among them many FaPes).

Government systems are always the same, and this, from the outset of the first agglomeration of people.

We have dictatorships, monarchies, theocracies, oligarchies and pseudo-democracies, declined in many local variants.

Obviously, one would say Democracy is the most humanly practical, and this is almost true on paper. What makes democracy a subtle dictatorship are its bureaucratic variants and their corruptible applications. When abstract principles are codified and then face the limits and the multiple nature of human mind, then prevarication begins.

The solutions to these issues are often theoretical, we will return to chaos, and as always, from chaos we will re-emerge, and as always, the end will be the beginning.

Here we are to re-start.

Let's imagine that the strength and consciousness of IPPA is actually made up of a clever and creative plasma, not visible to us.

A pure power composed of energies and experiences released by all the living forms that existed in all the previous phases of explosion-implosion of the universes.

(See the beginning of this writing.)

We need to imagine this force, made of energies assembled during infinite billions of billions of years, a force that processes and manages all things from the inside.

(Science tells us that everything is made mostly by vibrant vacuum.)

Said energies are not equal, over the millennia the accumulated knowledge they have experienced, diversified them in:

- energies that once return to the matter improve us in some way;
- energies in charge of synchronizing;
- energies stuck at the initial state;
- energies that have strong memory of previous experiences;
- energies that suddenly have flown away, and being animated by deep blood relations, unable to communicate in a terrestrial way, talk to us through via energies able to animate wonders close to us;
- energy that having accumulated huge positives experience live near IPPA;
- energies that having had non-human experiences, are voluntarily re-settled.

It would be very interesting to know the ratio applied to allocate energies. I would like to know the kind of casualty, which made me become the son of that specific mother.

An aspect of our life that I find most enjoyable and that makes us travel on the vibrating energy of the Universal Plasma, is music.

The harmonic vibrations, the sound that comes from them, cause emotions, which sometimes makes us emotionally fly on the Nous.

Humans that with their natural structure, have the power to intercept these vibrations-sound, are very special. They live as immersed in a sea of sound, perceiving and decrypting in scripts all they hear. Those lucky living people who can perceive this music say that they have experienced a real emotional magic.

In this regard, the ancient scriptures tell us about an event that happened thousands of years ago in NaLa's land. One can read of a vision had by a leader, who saw in his dreams the StraLes coming on earth through sky clouds, using as a vehicle a golden ladder.

The ladder was understood by the tradition of the NaLa culture as the means connecting us to transcendence, identifying it with the music scale.

I find this way of interpreting the music scale as an emotional vehicle, which allows us to go into the Plasma of the universal IPPA, an appropriate simile.

Adding to the power of music that of an appropriate word, the resulting mixture becomes seductive, exciting, intriguing.

Humans totally or partially lacking in musical sensibility, are the proof of the diversity in the energy from which each of us is animated.

IPPA works inside and outside us, he occupies most of the micro and macro cosmos.

IPPA is the energy that interposes and harmonizes matter. Without it, substance could not have an appearance.

The *AlCh?*s are aware of this principle, and knowing that most of humankind does not contemplate this version, speculate on it.

But how they manage to do it?

Obviously via human hybrids, here mentioned as Caste, that famous 0.1% which evolves with the ArGos updates.

This is the point, the ArGos are managing with the caste of the few.

What is the problem then?

Responses:

- AIChi are failing to manage the infinite variants proposed and operated by the Caste.
- We are in a critical phase, I would say in a deadlock.
- We are too many and poorly distributed, such a rise of humans in such a short time was unforeseeable to the AIChi as well.

How will it end?

Possible answers:

- the Caste will go towards the management drift until extinction.
- The Caste through a world dictatorship will impose parameters to save itself and the earth.
- AIChi in agreement with Caste, will show up and something will happen.
- The consciousness of IPPA that is in all the worlds and creatures of the universe, will lead us to natural evolution to the point of absence of gravity, of the uselessness of money, weapons and lying.

To these answers, a further and perhaps a little repetitive reflection should be made about the current living conditions of human beings.

Here is how I think our travel companions can be identified:

- (a) a small segment of people lives in well-being, and are well-informed about all the crucial topics. They have only one fear, to slip in (b);
- (b) most of humanity, they receive partial information, are misinformed, and use all their waking time to get livelihoods, drugs to anesthetize themselves and various other comforts. All provided by the strategies of (a);
- (c) the remaining ones, who live in extreme conditions, and look at those who have a more humane livelihood, damning their soul in order to climb in (b).

Based on these reflections, I must say that there are also differences between the ArGas.

There are two types of ArGas: those who have close relationships with politics and science, and those closer to the leaders of the transcendental caste.

Each of them sides with his own category, as reported in the experiences of our ancestors, in the stories we call mythological, and in the many accounts of ancient literatures.

At this point, you are certainly asking where is the scoop, if all this is the result of autonomous evaluations.

Has this list of trivialities woken up some dormant curiosity?

What are the topics to be deeply studied in order to build a common awareness for our existence, if there is one?

I hazard some hints.

Our world will be absorbed by the Sun in 4 billion years. By then, all living forms will have been disappeared, and this will happen irrespective of their (our) individual behavior.

Our bodies and everything that has existed in the forms and stories we know will fade, together with all the faiths and creeds we have experienced.

There will be no evident trace of our history and of the Earth.

Unless, before all this happens, humans will be able to live in some other world.

What is left then, of all our lives from the beginning of time?

Here comes LML to help us.

The billions of billions of energies and experiences that have animated the living creatures of all the different universes, after the catastrophe will become an unimaginable force. This power with its evolutionary heritage, will be living in other worlds; under what aspect, we are not given to know. And even if this does not happen, there will still be in them, the amount of experiences waiting to animate new forms of life with no time limit.

The reason for life may therefore be explained in the necessity that the infinite and immense intelligence of IPPA, regardless of name, position and time, will not allow us to vanish, as IPPA cannot exist in solitude.

Thus, it is not possible that we are here, just to spend our little days.

Earth will end, it has been immanently announced by science through astrophysical calculations, and transcendently through writings with clear apocalyptic predictions.

Let me make further considerations.

It took a few billion years to reach our actual point of evolution, and nothing can make us think that no other cycles of life preceded us.

If our life cycle came to an end in the next million years, there would still be mathematical certainty that other life cycles could take place.

What can be done?

The least risky response is that science and theology must work together, as it is also with the strength of faith that science reaches important goals.

Now, we are still far away from finding places alternatives to Earth, we are still thinking of moving in space by flying machines, not ready for travelling other galaxies, our beloved Milky Way is still out of reach.

If we reduce our galaxy to a surface of 100 square kilometers, the section so far explored is about few tenths of a square millimeter.

If we think of it as a metropolis, we have just started opening the door of the apartment where we live.

To travel on these immense distances the idea of mechanical propulsion must be abandoned. Something like mind concentration, to materialize oneself on the own thoughts, might be the road to the solution.

One must work on the force of conviction without limits, mind is the true propulsion that connects us to universal plasma, to the energy of IPPA.

Only the mind has the solutions that will free us from the gravity of our limits.

This strength is already in us, sometimes manifested with phenomena that we call miracles. If we jointly cultivate and strengthen the strategies of the Epigenetics and Meditation we will cross the border between the so-called miracles and the knowledge of our real essence, freeing ourselves from the waiting for what we (erroneously) think are mysterious events triggered by something we do not know and we cannot control.

I want to make an example.

Using physical immobility, with proper meditation techniques, once we are mentally positioned on a destination, we just have to use the pure force of the thought, and the trip takes place on the universal energy of the plasma network.

A curiosity:

the theoretical journeys of Star Trek, flights, violating the law of relativity. In the scientific imagination, a warp drive is used, this thrust allows the spaceships to reach speeds faster than light. By doing this, the space bends, shortening distances between the starting and the arrival point.

A healthful imagination can give you amazing answers, even if not all of them become “the solution”.

An example of this are the artifacts left on our earth by the various ethnic groups that populated it.

Of these sites, canonical culture does not give answers, or rather, it calls them mysteries. The scholars who dare to look the Beyond, point out interesting similarities among them.

Yes, it is true, to acknowledge that thousands of years ago there advanced technologies were used would jeopardize the reputation of most of the academic world. But what is so wrong in making guesswork?

Yes, walls built with stereotyped models are shells hard to crumble.

Why might not have been there a more advanced civilization that preceded us, and that an event of extraordinary violence wiped away together with most living beings? And why those few survivors might not have been forced to continue to exist for thousands of years somewhere, perhaps in the underground?

Once the living conditions were rebalanced, they might have started a new life-cycle, a new story.

And what kind of technology might they have been able to bring with them from previous experiences?

We can imagine that generation after generation, the holders of those skills have handed it down, until the few selected ones.

The great knowledge, in genetics and other sciences, was left in those few, say wise, or cunning, who understood its power to dominate the future.

This could also make more understandable the birth of people with a more evolved genetic heritage, who have accelerated the vision of the future. We have had inexplicable births of Sapiens, who found with no apparent effort brilliant solutions to problems that have puzzled science for centuries.

These geniuses were like flashes of light that in the stagnant darkness of the non-knowledge gave us answers anticipating the future of hundreds of years.

The transcendence of an Eastern belief says that the task of an Enlightened is to awaken in you the master you already are.

This means we already have the answers, but our addiction to consumerism keeps them in hibernation.

We are made of vacuum for 99.99%. That means a person could be compacted up to become a billionth of a grain of sand and all living species could be compacted up to the volume of few grains of sand.

Applying this principle to the whole universe, it could be reduced to the volume of a nutshell, wrote a great physicist.

Einstein had already given us the formula to explain it. Previously, Newton had enlightened us with a part of it. And so back in time, to Galileo and others. Not only in the field of science but also in art, which I consider to be a magical world.

A famous theologian, said that the few true artists flourished in the last millennium have made the invisible visible to the many.

All these phenomenal birth have acted like accelerators. They pushed us through goals that seemed utopian, unthinkable, or even believed to be impossible.

The new discoveries gave us a more dynamic mentality and a different attitude towards our body, made of electrical circuits, superconductors, electromagnetism, bioelectricity, biochemical reactions, minerals, metals and other advanced forms of technology.

We became conscious that we are made of the same substances of the Universe. Only the smart and progressive energy of IPPA may have caused all this.

Our body is the temple of IPPA, we are temporal part and materially activated by the universal plasma. We are robots made to think that we are not, and that is just because when we think of robots, we think of something mechanic.

If I could, what would I ask to IPPA is:

- is there a strategy that makes us part of a whole one?
- If yes, what are the limits of the value of free will?

While waiting for these answers, the events I'm experiencing are revolutionizing our existence. They are already happening thanks to our technologic IPPA.

Nowadays the same information is visible in all places on Earth. On this great webpage, all the possible theories and events occurred since the beginning of our history are readable, at the same time, everywhere. We can in real time learn the predictions of future events, and interact with them.

And here, too, the PlaPro talk to us with their techniques of deception and appearance.

But it must also be said that, if this technology will be used with the proper filters against false information and plagiarism, it gives the opportunity to get rid of cultural darkness. Everyone has access to everything. A possible positive aspect of this powerful tool is that only little information can be deliberately hidden. Paying attention to what surrounds us, we can become aware of partial versions.

Thus, the cultural revolution began, and this was the fuel that powered the exponential growth of mass migration.

The East moves to a more attractive and technologically seductive West.

What is the problem, or rather, what are the future problems?

One of the major causes of contrast is the different transcendence between the middle-east and the west.

Integration is demanding and difficult, and its failure is often the sparkle of marginalization and blind anger.

Living in poverty alongside wealth showcases, not for a day but for years, for a lifetime, leads to becoming easy prey for the pseudo-leaders of crusades.

The choices are between experiencing brutalizing and social injustices or becoming forerunners of liberal equality.

The ancient “law of retaliation” has become “turn the other cheek” and then “eliminate those who disagree with you”.

The other transcendences of far-east say “mortify your ego” “free yourself from materialism and become enlightened”.

On second thought, on the base of these values one could also start a dialogue, as at least the starting points are quite clear. The clergy and financial lobbyists could peacefully do it.

I think that if this has not happened yet, it is just because the presumptuous filters of the different factions do not allow it. Everyone waits for the other to take the first step.

But about this, a further thought-question must be made: and if in addition to presumption there is also a pre-packaged Orthodoxy?

Let’s make a little meditation on the values of theocratic governments. Let’s start from the principle that administering or governing should not be related to religiousness.

The AIChi were well aware of it, see the terrestrial end of Baje.

In fact, it is my belief that religious violence and orthodoxy are attributable only to the PlaPro and to those who sponsor them.

Their psycho-sophistic techniques are studied to be suitable to the willpower of those since their birth appointed to, so to generate violent performers against anyone who is carefully defined as an enemy.

Is there an economic return in all this?

Of course, there is.

What is it going to happen then?

I will risk some answers:

- Considered the economic harsh and transcendental contrasts we are facing, the AIChi will cause another disaster that will eliminate at least 99% of the Earth’s inhabitants, leaving alive only a few selected.
- Humans anesthetized by their addictions, will cause some catastrophe and the AIChi will intervene only to avoid extinction.
- Or – which is my hope - a revolutionary idea able to interface the minds of clerical leaders with the big financial lobbyists, as a result we have long-term, a project shared with the rest of humanity.

IPPA and the AIChi do not want the extinction of terrestrial life, since it does not make sense to eliminate their fuel, they exist because we do. It is a bit like the myth of Persephone, who, kidnapped by Ades, was forced to live in the afterlife with him. But her mother Demeter, Goddess of Nature and harvests, threatened the Deities with the drying out of any vegetation on Earth if her daughter would not return to her. This would have killed nature and its inhabitants. This would have left deities unemployed. And finally, we return to transcendence, as the ultimate goal.

When pains are snatching your brain and nobody can help you, all those around you disappear uselessly into the fog of your only thought, a single abandonment, a single hope that everything will end, at once. It is said that even BaJe near the earthly end, shouted it out.

But how to do it if you do not have the resources, if you have no strength, you cannot move and a curtain of darkness comes down to complete your solitude?

Here begins the path to transcendence, to heavenly exploration, to search for light, to invocation. Even the non-believers take this path.

In ancient Greece, it was necessary to abstain and endure pain. This extraordinary civilization, to ensure themselves a total transcendental coverage, devoted a temple to unknown gods. This gave more serenity to their passing, in case their belief had left someone out.

Praying with faith can it activate a self-healing chemical process?
Can this procedure integrate with others into a collective dogma?
Could this be the answer to miracles?

Or:

Is there someone who listened to your prayers and healed you?

In case there is no healing:

- did the self-healing chemical process not work?
- Did you not pray the right way?
- Is there no transcendental?
- Or does it exist, but decided to ignore you?

Science says that intense praying may activate special chemical reactions in our brain, thus producing hormones that communicate with our reactive system. True faith creates new events or destroys them.

Our mind has resources yet to be discovered and developed.

Let's imagine that inhabitants of other worlds have discovered how to move by eliminating or controlling gravity.

The questions are:

Would these beings having an intelligence that reads, control and manipulate the molecular sequences, be considered aliens?

Would these intellects, capable of generating phenomena considered supernatural, be considered a population of divinities?

Is this mythology?

Let's outline the following scenario.

Beings of other Worlds come to Earth, and looking at us cannot understand why we are frantically moving into clouds of fumes.

At this point, they offer us solutions to eliminate all that is polluting, and to heal our diseases they use genetics.

These interventions would radically change or make useless the transport, health, finance and war systems, and consequently all the organizations involved in these traffics.

It is obvious that anyone who comes from another world with these intentions will be stopped without any hesitation by the filters of the ruling caste. He will not have the slightest chance to manifest himself to the masses.

Only a mass invasion will have the hope to bypass the controllers.

And so?

And so, our evolution is at a dead point for questions of marketing.

Being capable to bypass this status quo, we would make a leap in the future and it would also mean that we are already made of eternity. Instead, we are living clothed in our body.

In conclusion:

beings from another world came to us when we were technologically unconscious, and we have thought them powerful and magical and valued them as Deities. Thus, they made us believe whatever they wanted.

Today we have a more effective knowledge and technology, we stop them because we feel they are disrupting our world scheme, or most probably, they do not show up because we have a body to be improved yet. For example, we lack an apparatus that reveals what we really think, so we can say something and at the same time thinking, doing and planning something else. This has been the great difference that made the Sapiens' prevail over all other living forms: nothing is just what it looks like.

But the AIChi, concluded that applying the bulling system to control the various beings is extremely complicated, see Earth's history over the last 500,000 years.

Despotism generates abhorrence, horror, violence, occult strategies, mistrust, revenge, and other humanistic negative aspects.

Millennium ago, IPPA experienced the message of nonviolence, the feeling of affection for all living forms, to live of altruism, and in order to keep the message alive in our minds, he shocked men by demonstrating the absurd ferocity that we are able to apply to our equals.

So, what is the solution?

Once again, it is our ability to invent, to search, to investigate, to experiment that can give us a solution.

We absolutely must bypass cultural orthodoxy, phrases like:

“That is how things work”; “This is what textbooks say”; “It is the trend”; “Everyone does so”.

To follow lazily these clichés, we live wilted.

Science and philosophy must give us a key to live in harmony with everything, and to get away from the belief that nothing changes.

Just so we can hope to reach the omniscient essence of the universal IPPA.

Theologians must culturally accept atheistic provocations, and be able to dialogue as laymen as well.

Scientists must accept philosophical dissertations with theological implications while maintaining their principles of immanence. This is the way to go, even if at the beginning, it will look like parallel roads.

I am more than convinced that, with the going and the evolution of events, some stimulation will open us to a more civically shared future. I cannot accept that the preciousness of the results achieved in the last 3 billion years may have an end without glory.

And I am reminded of some of Einstein thoughts:

“Religion without science is lame, science without religion is blind”.

Or:

“Despite saying that IPPA does not exist, he continues to exist”.

Which means that science must contemplate the possibility that imminent answers can be multiple and that religions must not start from the assumption that they are the holders of absolute truth.

Based on what has been written so far, my most recent reflections are:

- If on our world there had been no Gold, would AlChi have ignored us?
- Without AlChi, would there be a much more violent food chain?
- Would living forms have had a different evolution?
- The current evolution and technological achievement, would have been achieved in any case, albeit with a few million years of delay?
- The actual dominant beings would still have formed a caste?

My IPPA is of an unimaginable intelligence, he is creative and patient, not because he does it intentionally, but because he is so, he expects you to turn to him because he knows that this is the natural evolution of things.

There are people who find him while reading, meditating, praying, or offering all their time to those who suffers.

I would not know about those, who for so many reasons, they end their earthly life suddenly without having searched for him, without having mentally brushed him, without having recognized him in the events of everyday life. Conscious or unaware of this impossibility.

I perceive, however, that the IPPA of each one of us, is part of an omnipotent one, unrelated to space-time, and to which we return at the end of each cycle.

Ancient civilizations see rituals BARDI, symbolism ANKH, SATOR and others, explained the cycles of life by combining seven events-things:

the dual attraction, the semen inseminator, the womb, the energizing energy, the end of the cycle, the return to the high astral, the omnipotent absolute will. Today we can change the terminology of each of these seven things-events, but the meaning remains.

The dual attraction, magnetism between two things, this also includes the addiction.

The semen inseminator, instrument with the amalgams liquid potential.

The womb, the container compartment for genetic combination and growth.

The energizing energy, combined with force that gives life consciousness.

The end of the cycle is the fulfillment, the matter that becomes inert.

The return of energy-consciousness to the cosmic plasma, the gettogether with the all.

The omnipotent will, is the apparently not well-defined random-logic of things-events.

Many of the lives that have materialized do things that confirm the above, this happens when the energies are summed up by previous similar animations.

No one can choose the kind of energy to receive. Energy is end in itself, not knowing if it was part of a King of a Lion or grass.

This is the constant throughout our world, everything has a cycle and a deadline.

AiChi know that one day, the genetic evolution of our bodies, will allow us to use our full power of thought. This should finally give us the possibility of living, in dignity together as one human being.

They know, that this will make us move in real-time space close to IPPA. One day we will discover that we can be anywhere at the same time.

He is already in all of us, and lives in the empty space of active plasma.

Which means that all empty spaces are linked by an absolute intelligence that lives in us.

We are made of him and he is made of us.

And finally, I entrust myself in Lme, a true friend outside Plasma, a sincere observer of events whose IPPA is the undisputed protagonist.
(Lie and deception is a limitation of the Sapiens.)

I finish this writing with a thought not mine, but in which I recognize myself:
“Wisdom is a no power, a little knowledge, a bit of intelligence and as much more flavor as possible. There is an age when one teaches what he knows, but then comes another one in which you teach what you do not know: this is what one calls search”.

Book key

LuLe is a small energy that has not been able to blend with the others. A neutral observer and reporter.

IPPA is the power master source of the micro and macro cosmos, quantumly appeared.

AIChi are the Leaders with nuclear, genetic and mining super-technologies skills. They live outside of the terrestrial ambiance.

ArGos are the AIChi operating units, in charge of the genetic and spiritual evolution of living beings.

StraLes are the messengers interfacing the humans with the ArGos.

FaPes is the ethnicity that identifies itself with the most energetic place in the Middle East, here mentioned as NaLa land.

NoMe is the AIChi's referent, the governor in charge of the FaPes evolution.

TemLe is the NoMe's operational hand.

BaJe is the real humanistic revolution.

LeSco is the incisive intellectual who educated LoyPe.

PlaPro are the skilled speakers creating new pseudo-transcendental movements.